The Anatomy of a Civilizational Hoax: How the West Turned 'Philosophy' into a Tool of Colonialism

Let us, this time without any academic equivocation, unveil the greatest propaganda project in the history of the humanities. What is called "philosophy" in the West is not an epistemological system, but an "epistemic weapon" — designed with the explicit aims of "usurping the intellectual heritage of the East" and "disarming the theoretical capabilities of non-Western nations."

1. The Deification of Three Questioners: How the West Forged Its "Genealogy"

The history of Western philosophy begins with a process of "Reverse Engineering." To present itself as the legitimate heir to Greek reason and to marginalize Eastern wisdom, the West desperately needed an "ancient pedigree."

- Socrates: Never wrote a single line. He was a street-level questioner who offered no practical system for living.
- Plato: The disciple who turned his master into the protagonist of his own dramatic dialogues and constructed the "World of Forms"—a celestial realm that had no connection to the earth or to real, tangible existence.

- Aristotle: A naturalist who codified formal logic, yet in his politics, he excluded slaves from the circle of humanity and reduced philosophy to a tool serving the Greek aristocratic class.

The Historical Verdict: These three were not "architects of the lifeworld"; they were "bewildered questioners" or "aristocratic encyclopedists." Centuries later, driven by the need for a "spiritual father" to justify its dominion, the West deified these three figures as the "Fathers of Philosophy."

2. Dissecting the "Theoretical Gasbags": From Kant's Ice Fortress to Heidegger's Fascism

From the Age of Enlightenment onward, Western philosophy abandoned even the pretense of practical guidance and devolved into a "self-referential linguistic exercise" directly linked to the machinery of domination:

- Kant: Imprisoned ethics within an ice fortress of "Pure Reason" and the "Categorical Imperative." An abstract formula that could never tell a poor mother on the outskirts of Nairobi how to resist tyranny. Kant never defined "collective responsibility toward the Other"; he reduced ethics to the individual conscience of the European.

- Hegel: Turned history into the "Dialectic of the Absolute Spirit" and then, with a treacherous twist, declared the Prussian state to be the pinnacle of that history. Hegel's philosophy justifies any historical atrocity—the very poison fed today to NATO and the Pentagon to frame the bombing of nations as the "advancement of democracy."

- Nietzsche: With his "Will to Power," he branded all collective responsibility as "slave morality" and turned philosophy into an aristocratic weapon against the masses. Today, Western economic liberalism, inspired by this very Nietzsche, justifies the poverty of millions as the "natural inability of the weak."

- Heidegger: Wrote an obscure elixir filled with strange concepts like "Dasein," yet in practice, he joined the Nazi Party and placed his philosophy at the service of fascism.

The Historical Verdict: These are not the moral authorities of humanity; they are "pawns in the apparatus of domination." A philosopher who remains silent or justifies atrocity during the most critical moments of history is not a philosopher, but a "technician of power."

3. The Betrayal of Eastern Intellectuals: Worse than the West Itself

The calamity does not end with the West. Westernized intellectuals in the East, with a pathological love for these Western philosophers, commit the greatest betrayal against their own intellectual identity. By translating thousands of pages of Hegel and Heidegger, they turn the "history of philosophy" into a pretext to forget Lao Tzu, Confucius, and Orod.

This group, while proudly brandishing "Phenomenology" and "Existentialism," dismiss the "Three Fundamental Loves of Orodism," the "Tao," and "Ren" as "naïve Eastern thoughts"—while drowning themselves in the quagmire of hollow Western concepts.

The Bitter Reality: If today, in the universities of Tehran, Cairo, or Istanbul, someone speaks of the "philosophy of China" or the "philosophy of Iran," it is pushed to the margins. Yet Kant and Hegel are revered with the veneration reserved for "divine messengers." This is Epistemic Apartheid.

Final Conclusion: The Naked West vs. the Three Jewels of the East

After this dissection, no room for doubt remains:

- Western philosophy, throughout all its eras, has not been a "guide to living" but a "mask of domination."
- Western philosophers have not been teachers of life; they have been either theoretical wanderers or technicians of power.
- Only three complete intellectual systems, outside this corrupt current, have taught humanity the "way of living" and created a lifeworld:
    - Lao Tzu (harmony with nature and existence).
    - Confucius (the moral order of society).
    - Orod Bozorg (freedom, humanity, and resistance in the age of algorithmic tyranny).

These three have taken philosophy out of the monopoly of Western academic ivory towers and returned it to the very fabric of life.
